Reading helps in almost every area of smarts. Those that read have higher GPA's, higher intelligence, and general knowledge than those that don't. In Anne E. Cunningham's paper What Reading Does for the Mind, she found that reading, in general, makes you smarter, and it keeps you sharp as you age.

Directors' Pick

Saint Anything

by Sarah Dessen

"After her ne'er-do-well older brother, Peyton, is sent to prison, demure obedient Sydney leaves her sheltered private school for a new start. Avoiding her family after her first day at Jackson High School, Sydney fortuitously stops for a snack at Seaside Pizza. There, she meets siblings Mac and Layla, who quickly befriend her. Sydney is drawn into the warm world of their family and the pizza business, and crisp, unusual details bring each character and set of relationships to life...A many-layered story told with a light touch."

—Kirkus Reviews

"Dessen delves deeper than ever into the complex dynamics of families suffering loss and confronting changes that upend everything. Once again, Dessen demonstrates her tremendous skill in evoking powerful emotions through careful, quiet prose, while delivering a satisfying romance. The author's many devotees are sure to enjoy this weighty addition to her canon."

—Publishers Weekly, starred review

"Saint Anything is a poignant, honest story about how we might suffer the misfortune of someone else's bad choices, how people who love us can become family when we desperately need it, and how starting over might - miraculously - mean taking a solid leap forward. Is there anyone who can write about what matters most to teens as well as Dessen can? I sincerely doubt it."

—Jodi Picoult

"Sarah Dessen is something of a rock star in young adult fiction. Her bestselling coming-of-age novels are warmly written explorations of teens in transition that are, by turns, questioning, humorous and hopeful."

—Los Angeles Times

Staff Favorite

from Laura Eberly

Writing poems as a pastime is something I enjoy doing on occasion. I wrote this one last year, and I think we can all relate to it quite well.

So Little Time

The alarm clock goes beep beep beep
Time to get up out of a deep deep sleep
Get the day going, no time to lose
Minutes pass quickly like a short fuse

Jump into the shower quick quick quick
Listen to the clock going tick tick tick
Eat a little breakfast, then out the door
Off to work now, it's an all out war

Twelve o'clock noon, time for lunch lunch lunch
Get the brown bag out and munch munch munch
Half a day now turned into the past
What makes a day go so darn fast

Mid afternoon, time for a break break break
Eat a little pick-me-up to stay awake wake wake
In the home stretch now as far as working goes
Time really does fly as everyone knows

Back at home have to cook cook cook
Maybe after eating read a book book book
Look at the time, it's already after ten
Go to bed, wake up, and do it all over again
